CHIGWELL SCHOOL, WHERE PENN WAS EDUCATED

Foreword

During the spring of 1910 Penn Charter issued a little volume reviewing the growth of the school and describing her spirit and activities. The cordial reception given to this effort and the devotion to the school of her loyal sons, inspired the plan of editing a complete list of graduates since the reorganization in 1875, containing the usual items of interest about their careers.

This catalogue has been completed after a great amount of care and toil and by the overcoming of many difficulties. It goes forth, as the Review did a year ago, to carry information that the school believes to be trustworthy, to inspire her sons to renewed and constant loyalty to their Alma Mater, and to convince all readers that her perpetual anxiety and daily endeavor is to serve this day and generation more effectively than any other school ever served its day and generation.

The reader will discover that the list contains the names of nearly a thousand graduates (exactly 979) and that there are representatives in nearly every walk of life. Every alumnus will take a keen interest in the overwhelming evidence of the measure of success in their life-work that has crowned the efforts of this army of individuals who entered the struggles of life with the same general preparation and from the same scholastic environment. This success is seen to be independent of the course of study pursued while at school, but not independent of the character of that pursuit.

One might enlarge upon the results that this catalogue shows, of the system of education and the quality of instruction given, or upon the prestige in the community possessed by a boy who holds a Penn Charter diploma. But suffice it to say that these fellows are making good in the world, and, after all, that is the ultimate test of the merit of an educational institution.

Besides the catalogue of names, there will be found an article on William Penn, the Founder, leading facts in the lives of the Overseers named in the charter of 1711, and a sketch of Penn Charter's part in the education of the city youth in the early days. Seven representative graduates have contributed as many reminiscent articles, descriptive of the prevailing spirit of the school during their undergraduate days. These pertain to the school during Dr. Jones's administration, and each author writes of the quinquennium during which he himself graduated.

CHIGWELL SCHOOL AND PLAYGROUND

William Penn—An Appreciation

By Walter Henry Ottman

The latter part of the seventeenth century was a period of originality. Idealism in religion, democracy in government and a moral awakening crowded upon one another closely. Men lived intensely and thought much, and the atmosphere of revolution produced in turn greater liberty of thought than would have seemed possible a century before. It was a revolutionary epoch.

Almost unique among the men of his time, so far advanced in thought as to seem impractical to the ablest of his contemporaries, misunderstood and suspected, but persistently charitable and finally victorious, stands out the personality of one, than whom there are few more deserving the title of Founder and hardly any more grudgingly endowed therewith—William Penn, our honored Incorporator.

The statistical facts of his career are familiar. Born in 1644, educated first in a private school, then by tutors, with a period of residence at Oxford, supplemented by travel and study in France, and finally a brief study of law, he was by his twenty-first year equipped with a training above the average for his time.

Assuming in 1667 responsibility for some of his father's property, he went to Ireland and here he finally adopted the doctrines of George Fox and his followers as his own. It is as an eminently practical representative of the faithful Quaker that Penn is best known, and there is no call here for lengthy discussion of that side of his character. His adoption of these principles at this time was only the natural result of a quest by a broad and calm mind, wearied by the fatuous disputes of his time, for simple reality in religion; and the satisfaction with which Penn ever after referred to and adhered to his chosen faith proves the entire success of his quest.

Returning to England, the death of his father, in 1670, left Penn with a regular income of £1500 per year. Much of this he spent in the aid of distressed Quakers and, apparently realizing the importance of practical efforts in their behalf, he entered upon the life of a courtier in a court that held out to him no inspiration from a social or moral viewpoint, but where adroit diplomacy might in time prove of the greatest value. Penn himself had now passed some time in prison as a result of his religious principles and knew thoroughly what religious persecution meant. His intimate relations with the court, while they caused some misunderstanding on the part of Friends, made it possible for him to render them frequent services of greatest value.

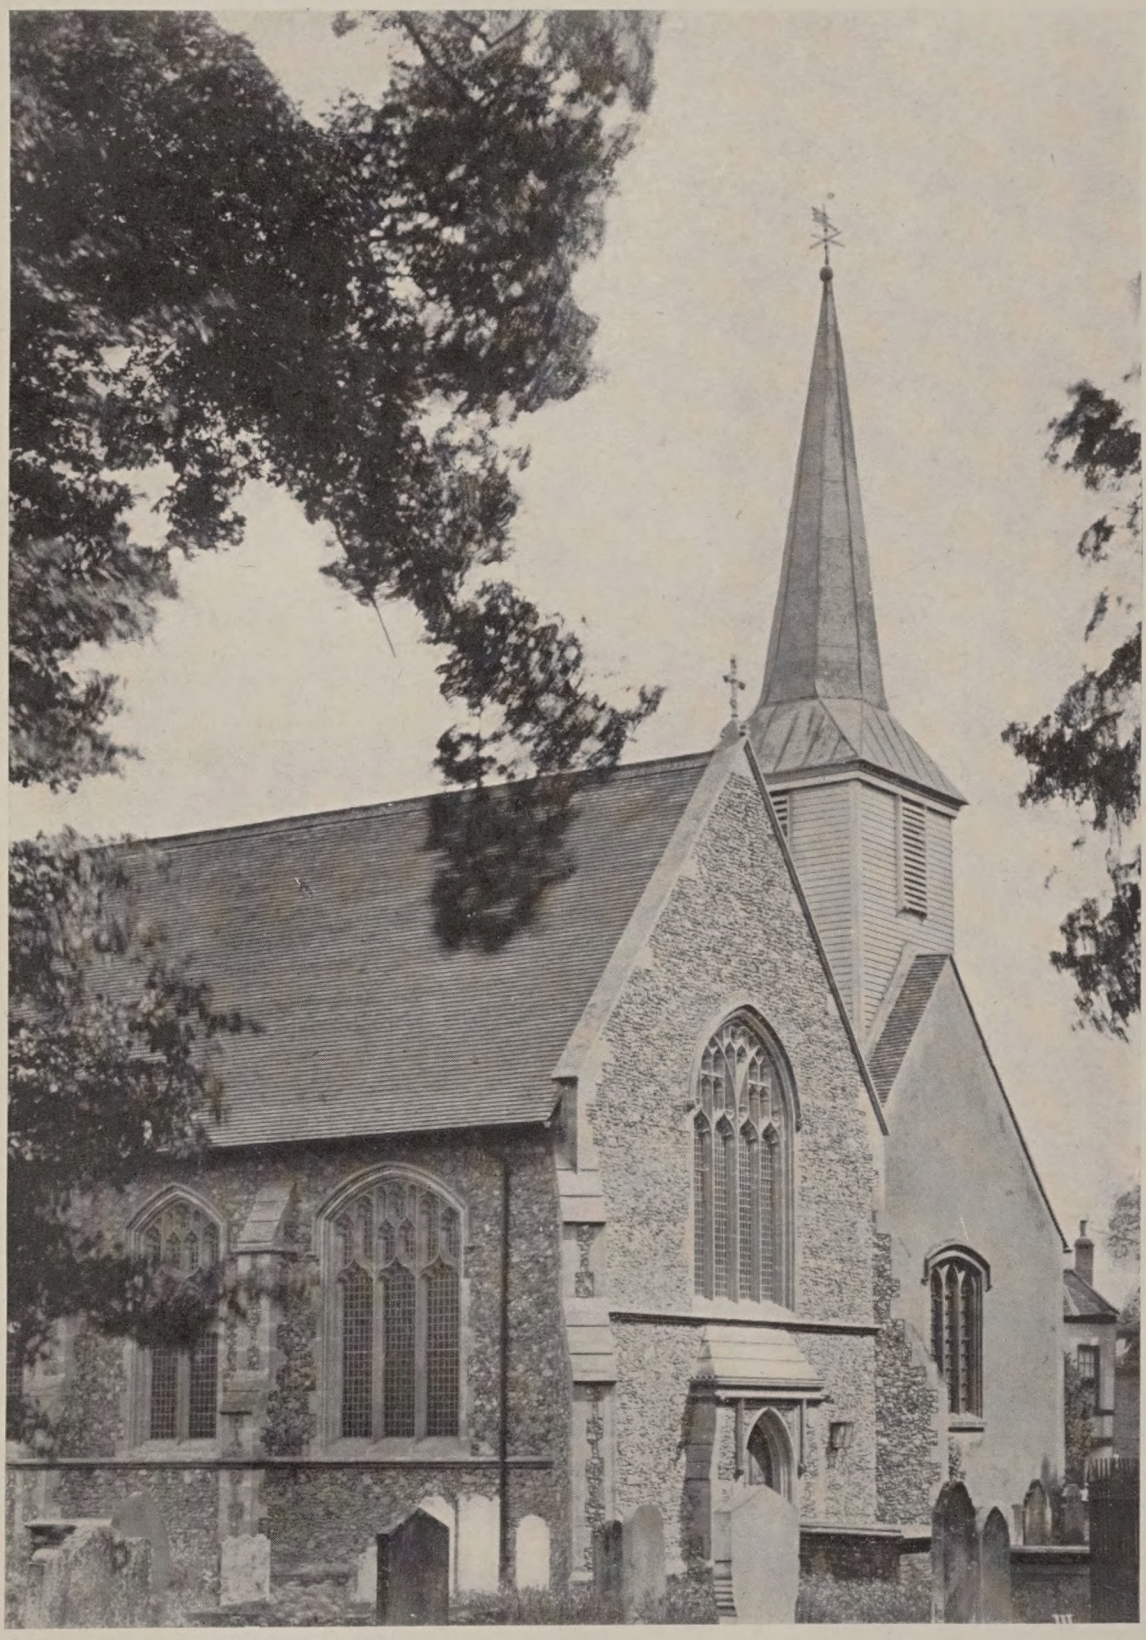
And here may be noted one of those traits of William Penn's character that lead up to a perfectly clear conclusion as to his proper place in history. His life period touched upon the reigns of five English monarchs, one dyarchy and the whole of the Commonwealth period. The amour propre of the Stuart kings, the exceedingly strong and generally extremely bigoted religious requirements of the time, with a practical certainty of a more or less complete reversal in the religious and social requirements of the court at each time of change, together with the peculiarly and conspicuously unassuming character of Penn's own belief, must cause astonishment when we realize that this wonderful man was persona grata at the Catholic court of James II and no less so among the Protestant courtiers of William and Mary, that he was able to obtain favors allowed no other Quaker from the dissolute hand of Charles II, and could bear charitably with the weak-willed policy of Anne. And then from the year 1665 to the day of his death, wherever we care to study his course of life, we find him ever the peaceful, modest, ever-reliable Quaker, strictly true to the dictates of his very active conscience and unyielding in any affair that seemed to suggest temporizing with the requirements of strict honesty. The immaculate men of the Stuart period were few indeed. It is not remarkable that one who seemed to approach that condition was misunderstood and persecuted by the little men about him.

The story of the Holy Experiment is another phase of William Penn's life that requires no description here. From the time in 1682 when he landed in Philadelphia, by fate and preference the leader in a great enterprise in the peculiar conduct of which he had no precedents of great value to guide him, down to the time of his death in 1718, his career presents constant claims upon our admiration.

It is difficult, fortunately it is quite unnecessary, to think of Penn as he is commonly pictured to us by imaginative artists, attired in a severe garb, presenting the well-fed appearance of a Pickwick and the supercilious attitude of a Samuel Johnson. The knowledge of a handsome, restless man who at the age of 38 entered upon his activities in America by attending an exhibition by the Indians of their ability in hopping and jumping and before leaving proved himself able to jump farther than any of them, is likely to be quite as inspiring to the youthful mind as numerous idealistic bronze monuments.



CHIGWELL CHURCH

William Penn—An Appreciation

The man whose ideas of a properly conducted family required early rising, regular meal times, daily reading from the Bible, carefully trained servants and abstinence from loitering and unprofitable talk when engaged in business activity, would seem to have had a well ordered mind, and the man who could argue with a noted writer, Richard Baxter, from 10 A.M. to 5 P.M., regretting, as he said, that the argument might not be continued indefinitely, can hardly be accused of being easily imposed upon.

But the name, idealist, is often only an abbreviated definition of a man born a century ahead of his time, and in that sense it is absolutely fitted to William Penn. When in 1677, four years before the granting of the Pennsylvania Charter, he became by legal appointment administrative trustee over a little colony in West Jersey, he put into practice there a "commission" system of government with practically all the essential characteristics of the modern system, considered by many a great political discovery of recent times. And in statesmanship and educational ideals he was in a class equally ahead of his time.

True it is that in some respects his Frame of Government for Pennsylvania proved a failure. But it is perfectly reasonable to explain this as being due as much to the unfitness of men for so much liberty in that time as to impractical idealism. William Penn stands on an immortal eminence as the pioneer of equal rights, universal suffrage and unqualified popular sovereignty. Warning the Assembly and Council of the new province not to trifle with government which he says, "is made necessary by man's degeneration," he anticipated the great political doctrines of Rousseau by nearly three-quarters of a century. But Rousseau's declaration of these doctrines brought on a revolution, while Penn's adherence to them was instrumental in building up the greatest republic in history.

And we of Penn Charter, heirs to the one great educational bequest of William Penn, have reason for our pride in our Founder uncommonly justified. Education in the seventeenth century was almost wholly classical. Penn, himself, at the age of sixteen wrote a Latin poem of real excellence. But this alleged dreamer believed in supplementing the classics with the attainment of a practical outlook on life, and his educational ideas fortunately took concrete form. "We are in pains to make them scholars, but not men!" said he, "to talk, rather than to know, which is true canting." "The first thing obvious to children is what is sensible and that we make no part of their rudiments. We press their memory too soon and puzzle . . . them with words and rules . . . leaving their natural genius to mechanical and physical and natural knowledge uncultivated and neglected," said Penn in the seventeenth century, and to-day we are taught to honor Froebel, born a hundred years after the founding of Pennsylvania, as the founder of practical primary education.

During one of his sojourns in Philadelphia late in life, Penn one day started for a sail on the Delaware. Some friends, thinking it dangerous, advised against it. "I have been sailing against wind and tide all my life," he answered, and thereby stated what in detail has required many volumes and much careful study to explain. It is the fate of the great to be misunderstood and by that token Penn's greatness is manifest, for there is yet much work to be done in making clear to this republic what it owes to William Penn. Writing from England on Fourth Month, 13th, 1691, to a Philadelphia friend he says: "I have many enimys, but some friends and ye one are so as much of Ignorance as Spight and ye others know me; and by patience and time I doubt not but God will clear up my Innocency and show I am more deserving than culpable."

"Exemplar of Brotherhood and Peace, Lawgiver, Lover of Mankind!" Our honored Founder! What an inspiration to the fortunate heirs of his one great educational bequest is true knowledge of the life of William Penn!

PENN'S BURIAL PLACE
JORDANS MEETING HOUSE NEAR LONDON

Overseers Named in the Charter of 1711

On this Board there were seven men who served as Mayor of the city (one of them for three terms). Four were members of the Provincial Council, five were members of the Assembly, two served as Chief Justice of the Province, two as Treasurer of the Province, at least six of them were among the first great merchants of the city, and one was an eminent physician.

Samuel Carpenter, one of the earliest arrivals in the Province, was also one of the most conspicuous men of affairs of his time. Successful in business, he was one of the wealthiest men in the Province and was noted for his unassuming charity, his hospitality and his industry. He was a member of the Provincial Council almost continuously from 1689 to his death in 1714 and was Provincial Treasurer at the time of his death. He was one of William Penn's most valued helpers.

Edward Shippen, originally a member of the Church of England, settled at first in Boston where he was very successful in business and prominent in society. In 1671 he married a Quakeress, became a Friend, and shared fully in the persecutions visited upon the followers of George Fox by the Puritans. In 1693 he came to Philadelphia where his strong personality and large wealth made him at once a leader. He was named Mayor in the city's first Charter, was also a member of the Provincial Council and Speaker of the Assembly.

Griffith Owen, among the first of Philadelphia's splendid list of eminent physicians, was of Welsh ancestry. He came to Philadelphia in 1684 and was esteemed as a man of sterling honesty, high ability and earnest religious life.

Thomas Story was a man of broad education and a highly honored Friend. He was a particular favorite of William Penn who appointed him the first Recorder of the City in the Charter of 1701. In 1706 he married the daughter of Edward Shippen but on her death returned to England where he died in 1742, aged about eighty years.

Overseers Named in the Charter of 1711

Anthony Morris, born in 1654, came to America in 1683, settling first in Burlington, New Jersey, then in Philadelphia, where he became a wealthy and prominent citizen. He was one of the first Aldermen of the city under the Charter of 1701, was elected Mayor in 1703 and was later a Justice of the Peace, a Provincial Judge and a member of the Provincial Council. His devotion to his duties as a member of our Corporation was noteworthy.

Richard Hill, born in Maryland, spent much of his early life on the sea, where he had numerous noteworthy adventures. Settling finally in Philadelphia he became a successful merchant. For twenty-five years he was a member of the Governor's Council, several times Speaker of the Assembly, and held numerous other offices of trust. He was three times Mayor of the City, declining re-election.

Isaac Norris, born in London, came to Philadelphia in 1693. Starting with little capital he became one of the city's great merchants. His success in this line, coupled with his great natural ability, led to his election twice as Speaker of the Assembly and once as Mayor. In his later years he became Chief Justice of Pennsylvania and was serving in that office at the time of his death in 1735.

Samuel Preston, born in Maryland, removed to Delaware where he was honored with public office. In 1703 he came to Philadelphia and in 1711 was elected Mayor. In 1714 he was made Provincial Treasurer and served in that capacity until his death nearly thirty years later. He was also a highly respected Elder among Friends.

Jonathan Dickinson came from Jamaica to Philadelphia in 1696. He was a successful merchant and had a large estate in the northern part of the city. He served his fellow-citizens as a member of the Provincial Council and Assembly and Speaker of the Assembly. He was also at one time Chief Justice of the Supreme Court.

Nathan Stanbury was prominent in the early political life of the Colony. He was named an Alderman in the City Charter of 1701 and in 1704 became Justice of the County Court. In 1706 he was chosen Mayor of the city.

Thomas Masters came to Philadelphia about 1700, probably from Bermuda. He was named as an Alderman in the City Charter of 1701 and became Mayor in 1707. "A stately house" erected by him in 1704 at the southeast corner of Front and Market Streets was notable as the first three-story brick house east of Front Street. He owned a large estate in the northern part of the city and Master Street is named after him.

NICHOLAS WALN with his wife and three children were fellow-passengers with William Penn on the "Welcome" in 1682. He came from Yorkshire and first settled in Bucks County, removing later to Philadelphia. He was a member of the Assembly in 1683 and afterwards. He died in 1721.

CALEB PUSEY is more closely identified with the history of Delaware County than with that of Philadelphia. He was an influential citizen of Chester where he had large interests.

ROWLAND ELLIS was prominent among the Welsh Quakers who settled a large district north of Philadelphia. He was born in 1650 on an estate known as Bryn Mawr near Dolgelly in Merionthshire, North Wales. His first visit to Philadelphia was made in 1687, the voyage to America consuming twenty-four weeks of time. He brought his family from Wales in 1697, settling upon an eleven-hundred-acre estate upon which is located a large part of the present Bryn Mawr, so named in honor of his birthplace. In 1714 he built in the vicinity of the present Bryn Mawr College a mansion, later known as "Harriton," and at one time the home of Charles Thomson, Secretary of the Continental Congress and one of the early masters of the Penn Charter School. Rowland Ellis died at Gwynedd in 1729.

JAMES LOGAN, like most of his fellow-members of the original Board of Overseers, is worthy of memoirs rather than of memoranda. He was a Scotchman born in Ireland in 1674 and educated a Friend, attaining a knowledge of Latin, Greek and Hebrew before his fourteenth year. He also showed much interest in scientific subjects. At the age of twenty-five he accompanied William Penn to this country as his secretary. Here he became the chief agent and most trusted adviser of the Proprietor, and his loyalty to his chief was absolute. His devotion to the cause of letters is attested by his interest in our Corporation, the Library given by him to the Library Company of Philadelphia, and the fact that he was a member of the Academy which became later the University of Pennsylvania.

The Penn Charter of Long Ago

By Walter Henry Ottman

" Hic in gymnasiis linguæ docentur et artes
Ingenuæ: multis doctor et ipse fui.
Una schola hic alias etiam supereminet omnes
Romano et Græco quæ docet ore loqui."[1]

A COMPREHENSIVE view of educational conditions along the eastern borders of the future United States, taken two hundred years ago, would have disclosed an interesting condition of things.

To the north stood Harvard College, already a well established institution of learning, its value to the country, however, limited by the restriction of its work, largely to the purpose of educating men for the ministry; to the south could still almost be heard the echo of Governor Berkeley's proud boast and devout hope not only that there were no institutions of learning in existence then, but that there might not be for many years, a hope somewhat discouraged by the founding of William and Mary College in 1693. Midway between stood the Colony of William Penn, and in its centre, one of the very first concerns of its founder, stood a school whose purpose was broader, whose method was more practical, and whose history was in its own sphere destined to be quite as fruitful as any of the institutions for education established up to that time.

Penn first landed in Philadelphia late in the fall of 1682, and, true to the liberal ideas of the Friends regarding education, we find in the Journals of the Commonwealth for Tenth Month, 26th, 1683, a minute recording the undertaking of Enoch Flower to teach school in Philadelphia at the following rates: Instruction in English was to be four shillings by the quarter, writing six shillings, and reading, writing and "casting accounts" was to cost the pupil eight shillings a quarter. Enoch Flower also agreed to board, lodge, attend to laundering for and instruct a youth for ten pounds per year.

The records are silent as to the further history of Flower's school, but that it was insufficient for the needs of the growing city is attested by the fact that in 1684 the Council considered the establishment of a school of Arts and Sciences.

[1] Thomas Makin's "Descriptio Pennsylvaniæ." (1729)

The Penn Charter of Long Ago

In 1689 William Penn himself, in a letter to Thomas Lloyd, the President of the Council, requested the speedy establishment of a "public Grammar School" in Philadelphia to receive its documents of incorporation from him at a later time. The Monthly Meeting of Friends on 26 July, 1689, decided to establish such a school, the Quarterly Meeting of 30 August, 1689, approved the action, and what was to become known as Penn Charter commenced its honorable career under its first head master, George Keith.

Keith was a brilliant Scotch Quaker, a friend of Penn and well qualified to teach, but being of an argumentative nature, he became involved in certain disagreements in the colony and shortly returned to England, leaving as his successor the first usher of the school, Thomas Makin, under whose care the school made its first real growth.

Thomas Makin was a typical old-time schoolmaster. Of somewhat forbidding appearance, he proved on closer acquaintance a true friend and wise counsellor. Of true scholarship, he delighted in the writing of Latin verse of some merit and his "Descriptio Pennsylvaniæ," finished in 1729, is of remarkable interest.

In 1693 Thomas Makin's school came to the attention of the Provincial Council, and he was called before them and ordered to obtain a license if he desired to conduct a school longer. He had first to obtain a certificate of his ability, learning and diligence from the inhabitants of note in the town, after which he received his license and has the distinction of having been the first teacher in Pennsylvania who was required to procure a certificate to teach.

The license to teach was followed a few years later by an Act of Incorporation of the school passed by the Council February 12, 1698. From this time on the relations between the school and the colonial government were very intimate and in 1699 Thomas Makin was made Clerk of the Assembly at a salary of four shillings per day. For some time after this the Assembly held its meetings in the school building, but in 1705, it was found difficult to conduct the school and the Pennsylvania Legislature under the same roof and the arrangement ceased.

The connection of Thomas Makin with the school was one of the principal reasons for its first success. He lived to be "an ancient man," as Franklin puts it in the notice of his sudden death in November, 1733, and although he had "formerly lived very well in this city teaching a considerable school, of late years was reduced to extreme poverty." His death was caused by accidental drowning in the Delaware.

On October 25, 1701, the long delayed first charter from the proprietor was granted to the school, coincidentally with the Charter of the City. This first charter was supplemented by a second dated July 22, 1708, and a third, the one under which the Board of Overseers now acts, dated November 29, 1711.

To treat satisfactorily either of the remarkable broad-mindedness of the author of our charter or of the history and character of the Board of Overseers is impossible in this paper. It must suffice to say that the charter is broad enough for a university and that the overseers have, during the two centuries of their continuous existence, had an importance in Philadelphia greater than that usually devolving upon the directors of a single educational institution. For example, there are over thirty trusts for charitable purposes in their hands, dating back to colonial days when corporations were few and the Overseers of the Public School were among the largest and most important of these bodies.

It should be thoroughly understood that the existence of the school as a single institution in a single building is a comparatively recent development. The purpose of the founder was to provide education for the youth of Philadelphia, whether or not they were able to pay for it; and as the city grew new schools were opened to meet the needs of an increasing population. One of them was known as the Latin School and another as the Mathematical School, still another as the English School, and for the training of young children several schools, in charge of women teachers, known as "Dames'" Schools, were established.

The advanced schools were in charge of masters generally skilled in their profession and frequently men of more than local fame. One of the most famous masters of the Latin School was Robert Proud, the noted historian of Early Pennsylvania. Charles Thomson, "the Sam Adams of Philadelphia," one of the most prominent citizens of Philadelphia during the Revolution and first induced to come to this city by his friend Benjamin Franklin, was for several years master of the Latin School. Other prominent masters were Jeremiah Todd, Jonah Thompson, an Englishman who came to America to take charge of the Latin School; his son John Thompson, who later conducted the same school, and, in later times, Charles Roberts, whose able administration is a matter of personal recollection to many now living. Space forbids detailed mention of the customs of the school in those early days, the usher's duties, the long lists of rules posted by the overseers and providing for almost any possible occasion, the long hours of school work and the quaint petitions of the pupils for changes which seemed advisable from their point of view.

The locations of the schools of the Corporation during the first half-century of its existence are difficult to trace. Frequent changes occurred and we find the Latin School finally located on Fourth Street below Chestnut on the site of the present William Forrest Building. Here it remained for about a century and a quarter and became the most important and finally almost the only establishment of the Corporation. It is interesting to note that in 1814 and for some years thereafter one of the Corporation's schools was located on a portion of the site of the present school.

The responsibility formerly laid upon the overseers was changed greatly in its nature by the establishment of the public school system of Pennsylvania in 1836. When we realize that the only broad system of free and general elementary education in Philadelphia had for nearly 150 years been that furnished by the corporations chartered by Penn, some more definite idea of their importance in the history of the city may be obtained. True, other schools had been established, some of them of excellent character, but their work was always in some way limited either in purpose, execution or existence, while the Schools of the Board of Overseers continued their very important work without recorded interruption from the day of their foundation.

After 1836, then, it became possible to concentrate the work of the schools and necessary to adopt some plan whereby an end equally important with that now abandoned might be served. For nearly forty years the matter was under consideration, the schools continuing meanwhile under the old plan wherever it seemed expedient until in 1874 the present system was adopted. Properties located in scattered parts of the city were disposed of. The Pennock homestead adjoining the Friends' Meeting House on Twelfth Street was purchased, a young New England teacher possessed of high ideals took charge of a school composed of seventeen pupils, and the second chapter in the history of Penn Charter was begun.

Joseph Brevitt Townsend, Jr., '78

I HAVE been asked to recall impressions of thirty-five years ago. Back they come—scores of them, with a vividness that is utterly lacking in many of those of far more recent periods. Could any evidence be stronger of the influence of the grand old school upon her loving sons?

I think the clearest of all my recollections was my glad surprise at the tone of the school—the esprit de corps of both teachers and pupils. I entered at the age of fourteen. I had previously attended an institution of learning (?) where spying by instructors and tale-bearing by the scholars were openly encouraged. To become, then, one of the constituent parts of a homogeneous body whose every member relied on the honor of every other member was like stepping from the fetid atmosphere of an illy ventilated room into the crisp, frosty air of a bright winter day.

Another feature of our school life which I look back on with interest is the vast amount of enjoyment which we derived from unsystematized school games. Indeed, I am not sure that we did not have as much fun as the schoolboy of to-day does with his large and well-equipped playing grounds and the personal care of coaches and instructors. Football in the yard was always a favorite pastime, and though played in the crudest manner, and with an unlimited number of boys on either side, it was productive of much hilarity, especially when some youthful Friend so far forgot himself as to combine the plain language with Anglo-Saxon of a somewhat advanced type. In those days the Meeting House was separated from the school by a high wall, and on a long punt the ball frequently went over the wall and into the Meeting House yard; it then became the duty of one of the younger boys to go over the wall to get it, and the unfortunate candidate was forthwith selected by the upper form boys, but always with a due regard to his stature, and his ability to catch the top of the wall with a run and a jump on his return trip. While the quietude in the meeting on Fourth Day and the good counsel which we there received doubtless had a beneficial influence on all of us, nevertheless differences of opinion did from time to time arise between us, and these were generally settled by an appeal to arms in the small street south of the Meeting House yard. I well recollect one occasion on which I returned to my recitations after recess, trying to conceal a somewhat sanguinary nose, while the boy who entertained a diametrically opposite opinion from that which I had advanced was the proud possessor of an eye, the color of which did not agree with his hair. I wonder whether he remembers it as well as I do.

As far as gymnastics were concerned, we were the proud owners of a ladder, a horizontal bar, and, if my memory serves me, a pair of rings, which were placed in a shed at the back of the yard. It seems strange to look back upon this insignificant equipment, but we must nevertheless recall that it was the nucleus of the fine school gymnasium which to-day turns out such a mass of muscularly good material.

But above all I recollect the personality of the man who presided over the management and the destinies of the William Penn Charter School, at whose feet we sat, as at those of Gamaliel. Always kind, except to anything like tale-bearing or petty meanness; always indulgent in the matter of innocent pranks, albeit they might be slightly tinged with mischief, or of practical character; a boy himself once, he remembered the fact. Indeed he was a boy then, and is to-day. Tom Brown at Oxford and his confrères had no kinder or more appreciative master in Dr. Arnold than Richard Mott Jones, and the affection that was formed for him then is as strong to-day as it was in our school days—at least among those of us who are left.

William S. Ashbrook, '83

Some months ago I happened upon my old copy of Fyffe's Greek history primer, a thin little volume, which I had studied in Quinta in 1880, and read over fifty or more pages with an ever-increasing surprise. The conviction was finally forced upon me that such Greek history as I had acquired later from books and from a visit to Greece was, after all, very much in the nature of extra illustration, so to speak, of Fyffe. Here were the pegs on which later information had been hung, here in their origin were most of the conceptions which I had thought due to later reading, and I mention it not as being exceptional but because I think it likely that every boy who was then in the school could match the experience. This would seem to argue not only that the book itself was well chosen but that the teaching had been exceedingly thorough. Thoroughness, indeed, was a distinguishing trait of the school, and another hardly less important was the entire absence of any favoritism. In this, as in the matter of thoroughness, Penn Charter was living up to the best ideals.

In those days the head master was not only an able administrator, but himself a teacher of remarkable forcefulness, attacking his subject with a fine enthusiasm which was contagious, and putting us through what was mere mental drill with a vigor and snap which made dullness out of the question. Among the other teachers, none will be remembered more clearly or with more sincere affection than Miss Juliette R. Hayward, who taught Quinta. She had a well-trained mind, an abundance of common-sense, and she was simpatica. She understood a boy, rejoicing in his successes and sharing his troubles. We were her loyal subjects and did an astonishing amount of work to gain her approbation.

I have dwelt upon the teaching not only by reason of its greater importance but because thirty years ago there was an absence of organization in athletics and other activities which was peculiar to the period rather than to the school. There was a somewhat invertebrate athletic association formed about 1882, however, and one or two cricket matches were played. There was also a bowl fight, ludicrous enough, no doubt, but being at the bottom of the heap I did not see much of it.

We did not have a commencement. We met as usual in the assembly room, the certificates of graduation were handed to us, with as little ceremony as though they had been monthly reports, the bell rang and all was over. But this very simplicity throws into high relief one's recollections of the boys, of the teachers, and of the work itself. Dr. Jones, while conserving all that was best in the old methods of teaching, sought diligently for all that was best in the new, without subordinating the personal equation of the teacher. The alertness of his staff evoked a corresponding keenness in the boys, and this would seem the secret of the continuing success of Penn Charter.

Post Wheeler, '87

Twenty-five years make most memories faint, but I think my impressions of the Old School will never be overlaid. They are astonishingly fresh and green!

I think the greatest thing about it then seemed to me to be its enthusiasm. It was more than an esprit; it seemed almost a passion. From the head master down through the corps of teachers, all seemed tremendously in earnest. The atmosphere was positively soaked in zeal, and we boys "caught" it, like the measles. Of course in the end one learns that this enthusiasm is the mark of success in everything one does in this world, but we boys at Penn Charter were put well in the way of learning the lesson early.

I think the next great impression the school made on me was one of its machine-like character. I mean in this to imply no suggestion of the mechanical or pedantic, but rather one of a certain conservation of energy, of effort without waste, and of the largest results arrived at easily and naturally with the least expenditure of fuel and the smallest amount of friction. As one says: "The wheels were well greased." No doubt most of us would not then have known just how to express this, but I am certain there was nobody who did not feel it. Sometimes a cog in the machine caught us and pinched us, but it was borne in upon us that it was our fault (whether through inadvertence or laziness or stupidity) and not the machine's. And at such times there was a fine impersonal element in the penalty and its infliction that left no sullenness. As I look back, I think whatever instinct of organization I possess was largely developed in this period; I am sure my bump of order grew rapidly in those days.

With all this mechanism, the association of teacher and pupil was a most personal and intimate one. There was none of the "lecturing" which in many schools nowadays is too often, I believe, substituted for the infinitely more difficult art of teaching. Contact was constant and very close. To speak personally, my own taste for the study of English, appreciation of style and form and color in diction, and, best of all, the creative habit, were unearthed—puny germs they were!—and fostered and nourished by one I am sure I need not name, since his connection with old Penn Charter has never been severed. I am always more than glad to remember this.

I recall most vividly another impression—the filing into the Meeting House once a week, the little expanse of black hats, pearl-grey gowns and placid faces, and the feeling of tranquil quiet and even control. Many, many times, in pagan lands and in strenuous surroundings, this serene old memory has come dropping back to me, like oil on my own troublous waters, to leave a pervasive sense of restfulness and peace. This may seem a lesser impression, but I am not at all sure that it is to be grouped among the things of lesser value.

The spirit of enthusiasm permeating the whole fabric, and the sense of organization—I have a shrewd suspicion that every old boy who is asked must find these to be among his deepest impressions of his own time. The third I have cited may seem scarcely in place while speaking of the characteristics of the Old School; yet it is one of the recollections that, at this distance, I would be unwilling enough to be without.

Charles Louis McKeehan, '93

Dr. Johnson, on being once asked how he had acquired his profound knowledge of Latin, replied, "My Master whipt me very well. Without that, Sir, I should have done nothing." There was no hickory switch at Penn Charter in the period covered by this sketch, but the spirit of the old Lichfield schoolmaster was there. Discipline, rigorous and robust, characterized every phase of the school's life. Then, as now, the supreme excellence of the school was its thoroughness. I have seldom seen a piece of slip-shod work pass muster at Penn Charter. Occasionally it would go through undetected, but these happy surprises were too infrequent to admit of any expectation of their recurrence. There was patience and kindness for the boy who worked more slowly than his fellows, but woe unto him when he tried to palm off something that he only "half knew." And somehow that spirit has become part of the very atmosphere of the school, until few boys have gone out from there who have not been disciplined by it to their everlasting benefit.

In fundamental things, I doubt whether the school has changed in the thirty-six years during which Dr. Jones has been head master. It is the opinion of the alumni, at least, that it became a great school on the day on which he took charge. But, in some respects, the period from 1890 to 1895 marked an epoch and saw the school assume a position substantially like that of to-day. The present buildings had been entirely completed and, though much improved since then, the student of that day still finds himself among familiar surroundings as he wanders through the school. It had already become a large school, the roll containing about four hundred names. Many of the activities that now play an important part in the school's life passed the experimental stage and became established in that period. The Magazine took its place among the best of school periodicals. The Glee Club won a permanent place for itself. The Inter-Academic Athletic Association became the centre and focus of athletic effort, and the inter-school matches held under its auspices were the great events of the year. We had the "Blues" and "Yellows" and the wholesome principle embodied in them was beginning to draw the whole student body into the school's athletics. The Science Club had become an assured success, its name being later appropriately changed to the "A. D. Gray Science Club," thus linking with it a name to be forever cherished at Penn Charter.

The mention of Gray's name cannot fail to bring to the student of that day pleasant and grateful recollections of the men and women who comprised the staff of the school. Scattered as their students now are, each bears upon him something of the stamp and impress of his early teachers, and each, as he repeats their names to-day and recalls his intimate daily association with them at life's formative period, makes grateful acknowledgment that he is indebted to them for much of the best that is in him.

William Paul O'Neill, '97

Such delightfully pleasant memories and recollections invariably arise when the Old School comes to my mind that it is exceedingly difficult for me to descend to earth and attempt to put on paper in cold words some of my impressions of the years I passed there. Much rather would I sit with some old classmate, as I often do, and, with reminiscent smile and tender memory, recall joyfully the glories and triumphs of our period. For ours, of course, was the Golden Age of Penn Charter. No equally illustrious era had ever before been known in the history of the school and none such would ever happen again. Undoubtedly all Penn Charter alumni believe this of their own age. A great many of them, some much older and some much younger than I, have at various times tried to impress upon my mind that theirs was the grandest period in Penn Charter's history. On these occasions I have always felt that the school must be indeed a vital force which could thus imbue its alumni with this undying spirit of loyalty and fidelity to its memory. Such a school can never die.

The closing years of the nineteenth century were, roughly speaking, those of my undergraduate period at the school. Looking back now it would seem to me that they marked also the close of that period of internal development which began when Doctor Jones came to the school and started that steady, solid growth which Penn Charter has enjoyed since he assumed the headmastership and which has now placed her among the leading preparatory schools of the world. Concerning the wonderful period of external development upon which the school has entered, it will be reserved for some later alumni to record. To me, I hope, will be allowed the privilege of witnessing it.

From the Reorganization to 1911

During my years there the number of pupils reached the limit that could be held in the present buildings, and the staff had been correspondingly enlarged and strengthened. Athletics had been developed in a sane manner along numerous lines and Penn Charter was usually found heading the old Inter-academic Association in most sports. In all this period of growth and prosperity the aim of the school and its staff was always the fulfillment of its motto, "Good instruction is better than riches," and, as all of us know, a high standard of scholarship was constantly maintained and never sacrificed to obtain athletic or social distinction.

In college I think we all found we had been as well prepared as any and better than most of our fellow students from other schools, and it was no surprise to see Penn Charter well represented in all the activities of college life and her graduates capture a good share of all the glory to be had in those four years.

In business and professional life I find the men of my time have obtained the same relative high measure of success as those who have gone before us have done and as our successors are doing, and a wonderful body of alumni is growing up of which the school should well be proud.

To appreciate fully and correctly the benefits of any age it is necessary to get away from it in order to get a perspective on it. Looking back I acknowledge gratefully my debt to the Old School for a thorough, complete and liberal fundamental education and for many of my happiest memories, associations and best friends.

Walter Carson, '02

It is probably safe to say that no boy who attended the Penn Charter School in nineteen hundred, or thereabout, ever thinks of those days without many pleasant recollections. Upper Prima scenes remain especially vivid in an "old boy's" mind. What member of the class of 1902 has forgotten that large, sunshiny class-room, with its spotless, buff-tinted walls, the great portrait of Washington, the crackling log fire under the long mantel? Who cannot see—and hear—to this very day a certain, round, little man vigorously pushing back the sliding-door and running into a room full of chattering youngsters, clapping his hands and crying, "Come, come, boys! 'The receipt of reason a limbeck only,' Richards, what does that mean?" And who will ever forget another familiar figure, tall and dark, at times terrible to behold, thundering forth the principal parts of βούλομαι from the august eminence of the platform.

A host of such visions arises easily in the memory of a Penn Charter boy of nineteen hundred. What do they mean to him as he thinks of them now?

First of all, he realizes that the Old School in those days was determined to teach every boy to do his work and do it well. To be sure, Alma Mater did not stand behind the door with a switch, or take vigorous lads and make pale-faced hermits out of them. But she did possess a firm, good-natured will that all her boys should learn to think clearly and work faithfully. This was the primary object of her life, and no boy who failed to understand it could long remain on friendly terms with her. Patience with the stupid there was, of course; and mercy for the otherwise afflicted; but for the laggard and the bluffer there was only unremitting warfare, kept up, often (as many of us remember), far into the afternoon, while the obedient were tumbling about in the gymnasium or pursuing pleasant dreams of fame on the football field. The Old School—one is now glad to admit—was not an indulgent mother even at the age of one hundred and ninety!

This first and constant emphasis upon a high standard of work indirectly produced an ideal democracy throughout the school. It cleared the atmosphere for us and taught us to estimate each other on the rational basis of merit. We observed that the most "desirable citizens" in our community were those that could do things well; that the élite were the clear-headed and industrious. No shallow aristocracy of style, or wealth, or pedigree flourished in that cool, penetrating atmosphere. It was, indeed, invigorating air to breathe, though some had difficulty in getting accustomed to it. One self-complacent lad was actually reduced to tears of humiliation in a class of thirty because he was unable to construe a passage in the "Anabasis!" Another boy, insolent and quite a king of men out of school, trembled with fear every day of his life in the Latin period! Such was the wholesome, levelling effect of a high and single standard.

And yet, as everybody knows, life at the Old School was not all work and trembling. There were many avocations to warm a boy's heart; athletic honors to gain; rival schools to be outyelled as our picked heroes humbled their opponents on the field; profound editorials and thrilling tales to be written for the "Magazine"; beautiful lyrics to be sung in the hearing of fine ladies; great speeches to be delivered at Witherspoon Hall—and all for the glory of Old P. C., who looked on and smiled approvingly. Busy days they were and wisely planned to teach us some of the great lessons of life even before we realized what it meant to be alive. Long may the Old School stand to teach them!

In telling of the distinctive features of Penn Charter in my time, its unquestioned and continued high standing seems of first importance. It has been my fortune to attend two large universities and nearly every professor to whom I have mentioned my preparatory training has said: "Ah, that's a fine school." Not a particularly striking remark in itself, perhaps, but yet in the aggregate a clear and authoritative acknowledgment of Penn Charter's position in the scholastic world. And this aspect is bound to seem of more and more moment in the course of years.

At present, no doubt, it is for other and more intimate things that we chiefly recall our school days—how quickly and vividly their memory comes back! Our work was daily with us, and though we did not realize it at the time, it was as often enjoyable and well-planned. True, we did not always work; there were times when names were read out on the detention list, and we were requested to spend a few moments with Mr. Owen, Mr. Robbins, Mr. Ottman, Mr. Smith or Mr. Spiers—men who are figurative land-marks of the school. Unquestionably we grew to know our instructors —grew to know them well, and we derived immeasurable benefit from the contact. In this way we were taught many things which are not in books and which only the friendship of good men can teach.

Then, too, there were interests not so directly connected with the class-room—baseball and football under Dr. Sharpe, a man whom we all came to admire and respect; to say nothing of track, cricket and tennis. Many were the evenings we returned from Queen Lane tired but happy after our strenuous efforts "trying for the team."

And there were those who, doubtless exhausted by these labors, would nod in meeting, and many of us, I'm afraid, must confess to surreptitious naps stolen there and to hurried and guilty starts of awakening under the accusing eyes of inwardly-smiling masters. Yet meeting now, in retrospection, seems delightful; without it Penn Charter were not herself, and, be it added, many were the fine talks delivered by the venerable Friends.

To speak of one thing brings back memories of a dozen—the compass of this article is fortunately limited—and yet there is so much which must be said! Is any word of the school complete without mention of Mr. Porter and the "gym"; without Mr. Strong and his Debating Team; without Mr. Scales and the Musical Clubs which have developed so wonderfully in the past few years; without the Magazine and Mr. Spiers and Mr. Smith; without Mr. Owen and the fine work of the Science Club? Moreover, will any graduate ever forget the ringing cheers and fresh enthusiasm in Assembly the morning before the Germantown game? Each one of these thoughts touches responsive chords in our memories.

And again, our head master, what shall we say of him? As little boys we feared him, but gradually with the years there crept in that love which tempers our feeling into deep affection. To him more than any other is due that bond which draws Penn Charter men to each other wherever they may meet, which makes the very name of the school recall so completely good things which are past but not forgotten.

The School of To-Day

Edward Rutledge Robbins

After reading the foregoing recollections from graduates of the school, one is forced to the conclusion that the real greatness of Penn Charter has been the expression of the character of the men and women who have labored here these past years. The Penn Charter of to-day is most fortunate in having a line of traditions and an accumulation of noble standards that the undergraduates and patrons respect as altogether praiseworthy. Generations of graduates believing in the high efficiency of their Alma Mater have gone forth to college and to make their places among the world's workers, testifying by word, by act, and by their very lives to that efficiency. To appreciate the school at the present time it is necessary to understand something of the potency of influences such as these.

Not in recent years has there been exhibited greater earnestness of purpose nor more commendable spirit of loyalty among the undergraduates than one finds to-day. The equipment for physical training and development cannot be surpassed by any school of its class, either in the material outfit or the hearts and heads that direct its use. In moral and intellectual instruction the school is maintaining the standards and ideals of her great founder, as expressed in the ancient seal of the corporation. The clubs, literary, musical, athletic, and scientific—wherein membership is qualified only by merit or the limitation of numbers—are more and more sought after and positions in them are recognized school honors.

The excellence of the spirit now among the boys manifests itself nowhere more conspicuously and nowhere to better purpose than in the public appearances of the school. On such occasions as the Annual Entertainment, the Concerts, the Dramatic Presentations, the Field Color Contests and Penn Charter Night, there is a splendid undercurrent of co-operation present and a sympathetic and fraternal feeling of pride in the event and its complete success, that captivates the multitude of spectators, who have only admiration for a fine exhibition of splendid school spirit and loyalty.

In athletics the recent history spells championship in Football, Baseball, Relay Races, Cricket, Tennis, Golf, Track, and Field. In these honors every boy in the school has a share, and the real Penn Charter boy takes a justifiable pride and satisfaction in the consciousness that he is a part of a great institution whose achievements as well as traditions command the hearty respect and the cheerful applause of the entire community.

Hail to thee, then, Old Penn Charter,
Loyal sons, thy praise we sing;
Honor to our Alma Mater,
Love and pride to thee we bring.
May thy fame with years grow greater,
And thy colors, Gold and Blue,
Stand for all that's right and manly,
Honest, worthy, noble, true.

Editorial Note to the Catalogue

As is known to you all, these records outside of the strictly school part of them are taken from your responses to our requests for information. To the disinclination on your part to enter more fully into detail must be attributed such omissions as may be noted. All other errors, both of omission and commission, are explained by the statement that the compilers are human.

We have reached all but eight of the 979 graduates. The records of these eight are in each case designated "incomplete." It is hoped that a revised edition of this Catalogue may become a quinquennially recurring habit. The realization of this hope will be greatly aided by each one of you, wherever located, sending to us any item of interest in his career, and especially keeping us informed of any change of address.

The compiling of a book of this nature requires months of tedious detail work and in this case its accomplishment would have been well-nigh impossible without the help of many willing hands. To each and every one are hereby extended the sincere thanks of those upon whose shoulders has rested the responsibility of publication.

It is keenly to be regretted that it was found to be impossible at this time to carry the Catalogue Campaign beyond the reorganization. That work must for the present be held in anticipation.

Turning, in conclusion, to those whom this Penn Charter "Who's Who" includes, let us say that with you now rests the responsibility of utilizing to the full the opportunities for good afforded by this list. By its aid you can "get together," arrange class reunions, form permanent class organizations, or re-erect on the ruins of the old association a new, broader and more solid one, destined to abide, and to keep fresh and green the memory of "the long ago" over which we dwell more and more fondly as the years go by.
